Description:

Extremely rare map of America first issued by Jan Jansson in 1623.

As noted by Philip Burden in the Supplement to his Mapping North of America to 1670, the Hondius-Jansson map of America is a fascinating and until recently under-appreciated rarity.

While at first blush the map appears similar to Blaeu's America, there are a number of differences. The Hondius-Jansson map includes inset views of North America, including the Poetiock Village in North Carolina & views of Carolina and St. Augustine. The peninsular California is retained, with the extended Northwest Coast including definitive placenames north of 40 degrees.

The East Coast of North America is rich with Indian names. The polar region inset is derived from Blaeu's wall map of 1608, as are the towns illustrated along the top.

The map was originally intended to resemble the Jodocus Hondius Jr. map of America, first published in 1618 (Burden 192), but with the addition of Tierra del Fuego and a complete re-working of the costume views on the sides. It also included a set of views across the bottom of the map, which were removed very early in the printing history of the plate. Shortly after the plate was completed in 1623, the top right corner of the plate chipped off. After cataloging the map for the first volume of his work on North America, Burden learned of several new unrecorded states of the map, such that the history of the map is now believed to be as follows:
