Description:

Finely colored example of this scarce map of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and contiguous parts of Russia and Belarus, published by the Akademiiia nauk SSR (Russian Academy of Science) in St. Petersburg.

The map extends south to Wilna and Minsk, showing remarkable details.

As noted by Rumsey:

The first atlas of Russia, published by the Academy of Sciences in St. Petersburg, expanding on the cartographic work done previously by Ivan K. Kirilov. Postnikov: "It brings together all the geographical discoveries of the early 18th century to give a fuller picture of the entire Empire than shown in the so-called Kirilov atlas. The maps were mostly based on instrumental surveys, geographical descriptions and maps compiled by the Petrine geologists and their successors."
