Description:

Attractive antique sea chart of the westernmost portion of the present-day Netherlands. This area, composed of many below-sea level islands, was part of the United Provinces at the time of this map's publication. An active draining system (still being developed when this map was made) alongside sea defenses prevents this area from flooding.

This chart, produced for Bellin's maritime pocket atlas, shows the region in detail with many sandbars, towns, forts, and other features named. Near Sud Beveland, a portion of the sea is called the "drowned land."

Detailed Condition:

Original hand-color.
