Description:

Nice original antique map of the region around Liege and Maastricht on the present-day border between Belgium, the Netherlands, and Germany. This highly detailed and attractive map was published by Nicolas Sanson in Paris in the end of the 17th century.

The map shows the cities of Roermond, Maastricht, Liege, Aachen, and Huy. Many additional towns and cities are named. The map shows a number of geographical features including rivers, forests, swamps, and more.

The map states, in French, that the territory shown was divided between the Catholic King (this would have been the Hapsburg Phillip IV or Charles II, the successive Kings of Spain and rulers of the Spanish Netherlands) and the United Provinces, which had just come out of a rebellion against their former Spanish rulers and an eighty-year-long conflict with the Hapsburg house. At the time, the Netherlands were at the start of their Golden Age and increasing in importance.
