Description:

An American Rarity -- The First Large Scale Charting The Potomac From Washington DC to Chesapeake Bay

Monumental set of four separately published hydrographical charts of the Potomac River constituting one large mapping of the length of the river from its opening to Washington, D.C.

While the surveying project predated the Civil War (triangulation and hydrography started in 1860, while topography was started in 1858), the Potomac played an important enough strategic role during the Civil War that the completion of the mapping surely gained initial impetus from that event. Completed in the early part of the Civil War, the chart is a remarkably detailed and comprehensive treatment of the River, including ferry points, lighthouses, buoys, soundings, fortifications, waterfront railroad depots and rail lines. In aggregate, the map stretches to about 10 feet wide by 5 feet tall, providing a meticulous image of the river and its environs.

The chart even includes the dock, roads and buildings at Mount Vernon, George Washington's long time home.

Later examples were issued in 1864 and 1868 in reduced sizes.
