Description:

This intriguing map, titled "Области Распространения Хлебных Растений" (Distribution of Cereal Crops), provides a comprehensive view of the geographical distribution of various cereal crops around the world.

Created by Friedrich Arnold Brockhaus and published in Leipzig around 1890, the map is written in Russian, which is unusual for maps of this subject and time period. It displays the locations and cultivation regions of various cereal crops across the globe, providing valuable information about agricultural practices and crop distribution during the late 19th century.

The map offers a unique perspective on the historical importance of cereal crops in different regions, highlighting the significance of agriculture for global food security and economic development. Different colors and patterns are used to differentiate between various cereal crops, making the map visually engaging and easy to comprehend.

The map remains a valuable resource for historians, agricultural scientists, and anyone interested in understanding the historical distribution of cereal crops and the development of agricultural practices. As a historical artifact, it offers a captivating insight into the evolving understanding of crop cultivation and its impact on human societies.
