Description:

A captivating map of Scandinavia created by John Seller in 1679 and featured in the Atlas Minimus. This map focuses on the regions surrounding the "Sinus Botnicus," which includes present-day Sweden and Finland. It provides an intriguing representation of the Scandinavian landscape during the 17th century, showcasing the geography and political divisions of the time.

The map is accompanied by an engraved table of regional placenames, titled "The Kingdom of Sweden Hath these VII Considerable Parts," which appears on the facing page. This table highlights the significant regions within the Kingdom of Sweden, offering a more comprehensive understanding of the area.

As part of the Atlas Minimus, this map is part of a collection of small-format maps that were designed to be both informative and easily portable.
