Description:

"Hungary and Transylvania Agreeable to Modern History," is a scarce map, published in London in 1729 by Herman Moll. As an early 18th-century representation of these regions, it reflects the geographical understanding of the time and serves as a testament to the development of cartography during this period.

The map is attributed to Herman Moll, an eminent British cartographer of the late 17th and early 18th centuries. A figure of notable influence, Moll's work is well-recognized for its precision and detail. This particular map carries Moll's hallmark quality, featuring detailed geographical elements and place names for Hungary and Transylvania, territories that have been subjects of considerable political and cultural interest throughout history.

The depiction of Hungary and Transylvania in this map reflects the complex political realities of the time. The early 18th century was a period marked by the aftermath of the Great Turkish War (1683-1699), where parts of Hungary were liberated from Ottoman rule and re-incorporated into the Habsburg Empire. The map, therefore, captures a region in transition, offering valuable insights into the shifting political boundaries and territorial claims of the era.
