Description:

A rare separately issued example of Jansson's map of Iceland, with no textg on verso, a blank title cartouche, two clearly re-engraved compass roses and obvious, although subtle differences in the engraved names on the map. This map was bound into a contemporary book, with the remnants of the stub margin where it was bound and otherwise narrow margins. A stunning map, including and erupting volcano, sea monsters, sailing ships, decorative cartouches and the spectacular landscape of Iceland. Carolius used Mercator's version of Bishop Gudbrandur Thorlaksson's map as his source. The map was first issued by Hondius in 1629, then re-issued by Jansson and Blaeu the following year, with changes. Non-Atlas versions of the map are quite rare.
