Description:

The map titled Principatus Walliae Pars Borealis Vulgo North Wales showcases the northern region of Wales, a principality in the British Isles. This historical cartographic representation offers insight into the geographic and political landscape of the time, detailing boundaries, geographical features, and key settlements in North Wales.

The map includes an intricately drawn compass rose, surrounded by various coastlines, mountain ranges, and rivers, particularly along the northwestern coast of Wales. Borders between counties are marked with distinct colors, demarcating areas such as Carnarvonshire, Merionethshire, and Denbighshire, among others. The map also features towns and cities such as Chester and Anglesey, providing a snapshot of the administrative divisions of the era.

Decorative elements embellish the map's design, including ornate cartouches, shields, and illustrations. These artistic flourishes not only enhance the map's visual appeal but also reinforce its historical context, reflecting the style and craftsmanship of early 18th-century cartography.
