Description:

Detailed map of the Principality of Transylvania (western Romania), published shortly after the 1699 Peace of Karlowitz.

The map includes an interesting discussion of the governance rights of the different local inhabitants (see below).

The map includes the following text below the cartouche:

Benevole Spectator advertite, Transilvaniem ex diversis nationibus, religione et lingua inter se differentibus consistere, quarum quae status provinciae efficiunt, sunt Saxones, Hungari et Siculi, quae duae posteriores non nisi nomine et sedibus ab invicem differunt, cetera conveniunt: Reliquae, ut Valachi, Bulgari, Graeci, Iudaei etc., ius civitatis non habent, sed fere ut subditi reputantur. Olim regibus Hungariae paruit, dein suos sub Turcis principes habuit, pace vero Carlovicensi a 1699, Romano Imperatori, ut regi Hungariae, cessit, sub quo et perennet."

Translateion

"Kind Observer, notice that Transylvania is composed of diverse nations, differing in religion and language among themselves, among which those that constitute the status of the province are the Saxons, Hungarians, and Szeklers; the latter two differ from each other only in name and location, otherwise they are in agreement: The others, such as the Wallachians, Bulgarians, Greeks, Jews, etc., do not have citizenship rights, but are almost regarded as subjects. Formerly it obeyed the kings of Hungary, then had its own princes under the Turks, but by the peace of Karlowitz in 1699, it ceded to the Roman Emperor, as king of Hungary, under whom it continues perpetually."
