Description:

Nearly flawless example of Fremont's seminal map of the West.

Wheat dedicates 13 pages and 2 illustrations to this map, which more than any other map before or after its publication embodied the changing American West.

Fremont went to California in 1845, making new and important explorations enroute, especially in the Great Basin. He proceeded north to Klamath Lake and was then summoned back to Monterey to participate in the Conquest of California. He later was appointed the first Governor of California and later arrested and found guilty of mutiny. It is beyond the space available here to describe all of the significant cartographic advances set forth in this map.

As noted by Wheat, though the map is not without defects, it is a wonderfully graphic report on where the expedition of 1845-46 went and what it saw. Great credit must be given to Edward M. Kern [for the topographical work] . . . As a contribution to cartographical knowledge, the case for the map's importance was well put by Fremont himself . . . In extent, it embraces the whole western side of this continent between the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Ocean, and between the straits of Fuca and the Gulf of California . . . It is, without question, the most influential map of the region during the 19th Century and a centerpiece to any western map collection.
