Description:

Attractive full color example of Henricus Hondius' derivative of John Smith's highly important 1612 map of Virginia, based upon the 1618 map of Henricus' brother Jodocus Hondius, the plate for which had been sold to Willem Blaeu by Jodocus' estates after his death in 1629.

Hondius map of the Chesapeake was the first widely distributed derivative of Smith's map of the region. The Jamestown (Iamestowne) settlement appears, along with a number of other early English and Indian place names.

This was one of the first maps engraved by Henricus for his Atlantis Appendix of 1630. It is the only edition of the map where the Indian faces the Chesapeake.
