Description:

Scarce map of Poland, showing both the Dismemberment and newest boundaries, following the Congress of Vienna.

This map was originally published with a different title by William Faden in 1799. The map is based on the Rizzi-Zannoni 24-sheet map of 1772 that was commissioned by the King of Poland. An inset contains a bird's-eye plan of Warsaw flanked by tables of information concerning the population, religion, and languages. A color key below the title identifies the regions of Prussia, Russia, Austria and the Kingdom of Poland.

James Wyld, successor to William Faden, maintained the high standard of graphic and factual excellence that had been established by his predecessor and his maps are among the finest published in the early nineteenth century.

Detailed Condition:

Minor loss at top centerfold and some minor reinforcement of creases near upper centerfold, else a nice example
