Scarce 5 map atlas, published in New York in serial format by Morse & Breese.

Morse & Breese's North American Atlas and Cerographic Bible Atlas were landmarks in American Cartography, being the first atlases to employ the cerographic printing process, which would revolutionize the map trade. The Morse family and this process are the subject of David Woodward's The All American Map. The maps were first printed in a series of inserts which appeared in the New York Post, and then later as separate atlases.
