Description:

An attractive early 18th-century map of the Duchy of Savoy by Petrus Shenck, after an original map by Nicolas Sanson.

This fine map embraces the Duchy of Savoy at the height of its military and cultural influence. Savoy existed as an independent state from 1416 to 1860, and consisted of the modern Italian states of Piemonte and Valle d'Aosta, as well as the French regions of Savoie and Alpes -Maritimes (including Nice). The map extends from the Gulf of Genoa up as far north as Lake Geneva. The Duchy of Savoy's capital was Turin, which at the time that the map was made was one of Europe's great centers of Baroque art and architecture. The country was bilingual, owing to its large French and Italian populations. Savoy was also at the center of military affairs in Europe, as its warrior prince, Eugene of Savoy (1663-1736), was one of the continent's most brilliant and successful generals.

The map was originally created by Nicolas Sanson, the cartographer to King Louis XIV of France, and was subsequently reissued by the Amsterdam publisher Petrus Schenk.
