Description:

Fine pictographic map of the New London area, drawn by the famous illustrator Harve Stein, shortly after he relocated to Groton, Connecticut in 1946.

The map extends from the Connecticut River to the Pawcatuck River, centered on the Thames and includes a nice combination of historical places and facts, commercial fishing information and the locations where artists flourished.

Harve (Herve) Stein was born Harvey C. Stein on April 23, 1904, in Chicago, Illinois. In 1923, he graduate high school, after which he studied at the Art Institute of Chicago.

In 1927, he married Hope Stein, who was also born in 1904 in Chicago. They moved to New York City, where they lived at 229 East 79th Street, in Manhattan's Yorkville district, where the residents were predominantly German. In 1927, he illustrated stories in Scribner's Magazine and the Sunday Magazine of The New York Herald Tribune.

He studied with Harvey Dunn at the Grand Central School of Art. In 1931, he illustrated fiction stories for several nationwide magazines, such as The Delineator, Woman's World, The American Girl, The Farmer's Wife, and Liberty.

In 1933 he illustrated Louisa May Alcott's Little Women and Little Men, for Garden City Publications.

During the 1930s he drew pen and ink story illustrations for pulp magazines, such as Blue Book, Double Action Stories, and Love Book.
