Description:

Cram's railroad map of Texas is one of the rarest of Cram's early maps of the region west of the Mississippi and one of the earliest maps of Texas to focus on its railroads.

The map is constructed on a very large scale and shows towns, counties, railroads, proposed railroads, stations and many other early features. Perhaps most interesting is the massive Territory of Young and Territory of Bexar in the west. The map also includes excellent detail in Indian Territory.

The map is very rare in this wall map format and more commonly appears in pocket map format.

It has been opined by some commentators that the map was possibly inspired by E. H. Ross (Ross' New Connected County & Railroad Map of Texas and Indian Territory, issues in 1871, 1872, and 1873).
