A Diagram of the State of Alabama Exhibiting the Situation of the Public Surveys . . .
1844

A note in the title references that fact that the earliest records for the Alabama Surveyor's Office had been lost in a fire in December 1827, and were retraced from official records (apparently held elsewhere).

Perhaps most interesting is the location of the areas "under contract" (marked with an A) and those proposed to be surveyed in the following year, ending June 1846 (marked with a B).

A foundational map for the cartographic history of Alabama.
