Description:

Eastern Sheet (Ohio and parts of Kentucky, etc.) of W.L. Nicholson's Postal Map, published in 1885.

Beginning with David Burr in the 1830s, the tradition of the American regional postal map became a centralized service provided from Washington, D.C.

In the furtherance of this tradition, W.L. Nicholson produced high quality large format maps for all regions served by the Postal Service within the Continental United States. Focusing on post routes and the location of post offices, these maps provided a concise graphic depiction of the Postal Services routes,
