Description:

The Land of Giant Patagonians!

Fine example of Willem Blaeu's map of the Straits of Magellan, Le Maire Strait, Fire Lands and the southern tip of Patagonia.

The map is one of the earliest obtainable atlas maps of the Straits, preceded only by a map published by Jodocus Hondius in 1606, with the present map significantly revised and improved.

The map is not to be confused with the later and completely revised map of the Straits of Magellan, published by Blaeu after 1634, which was used only briefly by Blaeu, before creating his own map of the Straits of Magellan circa 1635.

Blaeu's map is essentially the third state of the Jodocus Hondius map, with the name re-engraved. The Hondius, in turn, is known in a proof state (unrecorded) and a very rare state which is essentially identical to the Blaeu, except for the name change.

In the proof state, the west side of Tierra del Fuego and regions above are shown as small islands, rather
