Description:

Popular Japanese Conception of Foreign Naval Power after Commodore Perry's Arrival in Japan.

Woodcut kwaraban showing a foreign steamship.

This print graphically suggests the power of modern western technology to the very concerned Japanese public. It shows a steamship in the foreground while and the rest of the American fleet to the right.

The text in the upper section of the image reads: "Four large ships: eighty-five ken in length; thirty-five ken in width; thirty large guns; twelve breechloading guns; and fifty-two small guns. Two small ships: Forty ken in length; twenty ken in width; twelve large guns; twenty-five small guns; and five breech-loading guns."

Detailed Condition:

Trimmed with a little loss to the right edge.
