Description:

Scarce early map of Missouri and Illinois, hand colored by counties. Many of the western counties are Indian Lands, such as Kickapoo, Delawares, Shawnees, et. The Boundy Lands are shown in the North. A massive Wayne County dominates the south. A number of early towns are shown, primarily along the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, although no sign of Kansas City. Liberty, Ft. Osage, Buffton, Lexington, Jefferson, Charitson, Franklin and Boone are all shown on the western part of the Missouri, as is Ft. Osage. The northern portion of Illinois is dominated by early primitive counties, including Clark, Edgar, Fayette and Peoria. While the road system is better established in Illinois, the predominance of the state is still sparcely settled. One of the earliest separate maps of the state published outside of America and a fascinating map of the state, shortly after statehood. Gorgeous full color example. This map is a curious marriage of the Missouri map, in exact scale, which was also separately issued in the same work. Full color examples are rare on the market.
