Description:

A South Sea Company Map with Excellent Contemporary Hand-Coloring.

Map of the limits of the English South Sea Company, extending to the southern portion of North America with the island of California and Central America.

The map also prominently features nine inset maps, including the Galapagos Islands, Acapulco, the Isthmus of Darien, Straits of Magellan, Juan Fernando, the Gulf of Nicoya, the Gulf of Fonseca, the sea route from England to the Orinoco, and, interestingly, an inset of the phantom Pepys Island.

Pepys Island was named for Samuel Pepys by Ambrose Cowley, in 1684, who placed it a couple of hundred miles north of the Falkland Islands. Many expeditions attempted to locate the island, and it is assumed it was a misplaced member of the Falkland Islands. The top three insets are printed separately and joined to the main map, indicating this is the second state per McLaughlin. The map is filled with indications of currents, tradewinds and compass roses. The decorative cartouche in the map of Guayaquil contains a dedication to Robert, Earl of Oxford.

At the bottom of the map, Moll also promotes his 2 sheet map of South America, which he notes as being published in response to a "very erroneous French Map done at Paris in 1703 and to deceive ye world dedicated to Dr. Halley and pretended in ye dedication to be corrected by his own Discoveries. . . "

The South Sea Company was a British joint-stock company that traded in South America during the 18th century. Founded in 1711, the company was granted a monopoly to trade in Spain's South American colonies as part of a treaty during the War of Spanish Succession. In return, the company assumed the national debt England had incurred during the war. Speculation in the company's stock led to a great economic bubble known as the South Sea Bubble in 1720, which caused financial ruin for many. In spite of its failures, it was restructured and continued to operate for more than a century after the Bubble.

This map is typically found as two sheets joined as one, with three additional inset maps at the top. The present example was prepared differently, with the insets on a separate sheet, but not joined, and this map on a wide-margined sheet. From a composite atlas.
