Description:

Rare regional map of New South Wales, published in the late editions of Thomson's General Atlas.

The map shows early exploration routes from Pt. Macquarie to Mt. Forster and the Macquarie River, from Newcastle to Cumberland County and from Argyle County to the apparent source of the Lachlan River, centered generally on Sydney.

A large inset show the British settlements at Port Jackson, including the roads into the interior as far as Windsor, Richmond, and the Nepean River, including names of the roads and mileage. The large inset of Van Dieman's land shows the 23 Districts as then established, plus much other detail.

A remarkable early maps, showing he tracks of Oxley & Evans in 1817-18 and Howe from Windsor to the Patterson River.

Tooley identifies the map as being by Aspin, and identifies it twice as plate 174 and 199.
