Description:

Attractive Russian-Language Map of Russia, from the World War I Era.

Antique map of European Russia, published in Petrograd (Saint Petersburg) between 1914 and 1917.

The map was published by the Alexey Ilyin Cartograph Institute, which was named after one of Imperial Russia's great 19th-century cartographers.

The map can be dated by its use of "Petrograd" rather than "Saint Petersburg", a convention adopted by the Russians to de-Germanize the city after the start of World War I. It carried this name from 1914 until it was renamed Leningrad in 1924.
