Description:

A Contemporary Israeli Map of the Last Stages of World War II.

Color-printed newspaper map of Europe, entirely in Hebrew, published in the October 8, 1944 issue of Yedioth Ahronoth (אירופה אחרונה).

This issue of the paper focuses on Allied offensives on Germany's eastern and western borders. The headline story celebrates the beginning of "Stalin's autumn offensive" (התקפת סטלין האתונה), what would become the East Prussian offensive ("3 מיליון רוסים נכנסו לתקיפת גרמניה מזרחה"), with 3 million Russians entering the assault from East Prussia to Vienna. Another story reports on the Battle of Aachen (where Allied troops were engaged in a bloody month-long attempt to capture the important entry point to the Ruhr Basin).

The paper remarks on the death of Prince Gustav of Denmark, which is said to have happened under mysterious circumstances.

The key in the lower right of the map focuses on changes to the Polish border in the decades preceding World War II. An arrow below the map points to the southeast "1800km to Israel".

The map is an important piece of Second World War cartographic ephemera, reflecting an underrepresented and very important perspective on the War.
