Description:

The Only Folio Atlas of America From the Golden Age of Dutch Cartography -- Original Publisher's Gilt-Vellum Binding

Fine old color example of Johannes Blaeu's atlas of the Americas, published at the apex of the Golden Age of Dutch Cartography and the only large format atlas of the Americas published during the Golden Age.

Blaeu's atlas of the Americas is an attractive and important atlas that deftly blended contemporary geographical knowledge with rich decorative imagery. Blaeu's maps set the standard for the quality of the engraving, paper, and color, as well as a fine depiction of contemporary geographical knowledge. While other atlases covered the Americas in comparable detail, none of them held the same august position achieved by Johannes Blaeu's great work.

The atlas was originally published as volume eleven of Blaeu's famous Atlas maior, perhaps the greatest printed atlas ever made.

The Atlas Arms Race of the 17th Century

No discussion of the Atlas maior or its constituent books would be complete without an appraisal of the rivalry between the firms Jansson and Blaeu.

For decades in the middle of the 17th century, the firms Jansson and Blaeu were engaged in ongoing one-upmanship in the atlas market. If Blaeu published a two-volume atlas with 210 maps, Jansson would closely follow with a three-volume 300-map atlas. This process continued on and on.

After the death of Willem Jansz. Blaeu in 1638, the competition picked up still more; both firms issued a new multi-volume atlas: the Atlas novus. At that point, they did not hesitate to issue more and more volumes and to copy one another's maps. By the end of 1658, Blaeu had published an Atlas novus with six volumes and 400 maps, while Jansson had published a six-volume Atlas novus with 450 maps.

A new weapon was needed in the atlas wars, and so Jansson issued his 10 to 11 volume German-language Novus Atlas absolutissimus. The set had a huge complement of maps, between 500 and 550, and when combined with Cellarius's celestial atlas, and Jansson's eight-volume town book, his firm was the first to realize a complete description of the countries, towns, oceans, and heavens, following the 16th century Mercator concept.

Johannes Blaeu was not to be outdone, however. In 1662, Blaeu issued his Atlas maior (Major Atlas) in eleven volumes, with approximately 600 maps. He would follow it with French and Dutch editions and attempt to complete a Spanish edition. The Americas volume was the last volume included in the Atlas maior. The set was the largest, most impressive, and most expensive publication of the 17th century, and it stands as the pinnacle of printed atlases.

In 1672, a fire broke out in the Blaeu firm workshop, decimating the stock and the business, and bringing an end to the in-progress publication of the Spanish language edition of the Atlas Maior at 10 volumes -- it was originally supposed to run to 12. Johannes Blaeu died the following year, and the family business declined thereafter.

Collation

Complete. 23 hand-colored, double-page engraved maps. [2], 19, [2], 20-248, 251-254, 253-287, [2] pages of Latin text. This is apparently an early text setting with the mistaken numbering in around 250.
