Description:

A cornerstone map, exceptionally detailed and showing many routes and places of interest in the settlement of the American West. This map was published several times from the mid-1850s through the 1870s.

This map shows Fremont's 1844 and 1845 routes, the Spanish trail from Los Angeles to New Mexico, Kearney's Route, Col. Washington's Expedition, the Cimarron Route, and the location where Capt. Gunnison was ambushed by the Ute Indians. In addition, the map notes the proposed route of the Pacific railroad. The map also locates numerous forts, roads, Indian settlements, and a host of other early geographical features. This includes many dry arroyos as well as complex topography in the Basin and Range area. Numerous annotations provide historical context, for example southern Arizona is labeled "disputed territory."

Particularly curious are the layouts of counties in the territories. At least 5 of these cross the map from California to the Rockies, namely Iron, Washington, Socorro, Donna Anna, and the very narrow Valencia. These administrative divisions are fascinating and represent how the territories were governed at this time.

States of the Map

Twelve states of the map were published. These include:

- State 1: 1855. Publishers not mentioned in title block.
