Finley executed map of the Battle of the Plains of Abraham produced by geographer Thomas Jefferys.

Prepared by Jefferys for the British Crown, the map was drawn from the original surveys taken by the Engineers of the Army.

The map shows the location of French and British troops, artillery and ships, with a list at the bottom right locating the camps of the military leaders during the Siege.

The map illustrates the ships of Admiral Charles Holmes's division, including Sea-horse, Squirrel, Lowestoffe, and Hunter. The ships of Admiral Sir Charles Saunders's division are also shown though not individually named.

The camps of Brigadier Robert Monckton, Major General James Wolfe, and Major Hardy are all shown and the map is extended so that they can be shown.

The present map comes from Thomas Jefferys' supremely important atlas of North America and the West Indies, titled General topography of North America and the West Indies. The atlas is certainly the scarcest of the great 18th century atlases of America. It substantially surpasses Faden's North American Atlas, Jefferys' American Atlas, and Des Barres' Atlantic Neptune, in rarity. In many respects, it also surpasses those atlases through the inclusion of maps that are not to be found anywhere else. The atlases has only appeared once on the market in the last 80 years, with a defective copy making 8,000 GBP at Sotheby's in 1971.

Rarity

The map was not issued in any standard atlas and is today very rare on the market. The copy held by Yale is contained in a composite atlas which was gifted to Yale by Paul Mellon.
