Description:

Finely detailed chart of Pichilique Harbor, just to the north of La Paz, published by the British Admiralty.

The chart shows the salt beds at the southern tip of the San Juan Nepomezeino Island, along with the U.S. Government Coal Depot

Pichilique, derived from a Guaycura name, was originally a favored anchorage in the Bay of La Paz. This anchorage was used by the U. S. Navy for a base of operations against the west coast of Mexico during the Mexican American War. It later developed into a port. Two ferry services operate from the port of Pichilique, connecting the Baja California peninsula to the mainland at Mazatlán and Topolobampo, near Los Mochis.

At the time this chart was published, the island of San Juan Nepomezeino had not yet been connected to
