Description:

World War II era map of the United States, published in Chicago by Rand McNally & Company.

The map illustrates America's readiness for war. Its many military bases are located, as are the locations of its strategic raw materials, including petroleum, zinc, gold, mercury, iron, phosphates, Copper, Bromine, Sulphur, Lead, Tungsten and other raw materials.

The map was intended for a consuming public then anxious for assurances of America's strength and abilities to defend its borders, but curiously disembodied from the rest of the World and the war then raging on three continents.
