Description:

Nice example of Samuel Augustus Mitchell's detailed map of New York City, from his New Universal Atlas. This is one of the earliest maps of New York City to appear in a commercial atlas.

The map is hand-colored by wards, with keys naming public buildings squares, and markets. In addition, hotels churches are also named and shown. A separate key shows the notable buildings in Brooklyn. In all, this is an attractive map of New York at a time when the dynamic of the city was changing fundamentally and it was coming into its own as a world center for trade and commerce.

Detailed Condition:
Original hand-color. Marginal toning. Some minor foxing.
