Description:

Rare early edition of Tallis' map of the United States, including a marvelous oversized depiction of Texas, pre-dating the formal agreement of the Texas state boundary.

This map presents a fascinating case study regarding the borders of Texas prior to the earliest delineations of its borders made after it became part of the United States. The Texas border was in a perpetual state of flux for nearly 100 years. Several early adjustments include:

- July 5, 1848: US Congress approves adjustment of the eastern boundary from west bank of the Sabine River (including Sabine Pass and Sabine Lake) to the middle of the river.
- Compromise of 1850: Prior to the compromise, Texas claimed a portion of New Mexico, with the present map showing Texas extending to the Rio Grande beyond Taos, New Mexico to the Arkansas River.
- Compromise of 1850: Prior to the compromise, the northern and northwestern boundary of Texas followed the Red River west to the 100th Meridian and then north to Arkansas River. The Compromise placed the north line of the Panhandle at 36°30", where it remained until 1858.

Unlike later editions, this early edition includes a massive Texas, incorporating part of New Mexico, extending beyond Santa Fe, Taos, and Spanish Peaks, pre-dating the appearance of Western Territory and Nebraska on later editions of the map, which can be seen here:

editions. Vignettes of Washington, Franklin, the Washington Monument, a Buffalo Hunt, Indians trading with settlers and the seal of the union are shown.

Engraved for R. Montgomery Martin's Illustrated Atlas. Tallis was one of the last great decorative map makers. His maps are prized for the wonderful vignettes of indigenous scenes, people, and more included. This map is one of the best decorative mid-19th century maps of the United States.
