Description:

Nice example of Thomas Jefferys's chart of the coast of Mexico, from Vera Cruz to north of Rio Soto La Marina. The map is detailed for its time and would have been of critical use to sailors traveling in the region. The map first appeared in Jefferys's West India Atlas.

The map shows Mexico City, Lake Texcoco, and the road to Vera Cruz in the south. The main river flowing through the map, which is called "Rio Grande de las Palmas" is today known as Rio Soto La Marina. "Mount Orizava" (Pico de Orizaba) is labeled "always Covered with Snow".

The Nautilus's track from Pensacola to Vera Cruz in November 1764 is shown just off the coast of Mexico, as is the track of the Flota from la Vera Cruz. The Nautilus played an important role in the English presence on the Gulf Coast in this period following the French & Indian War and was headed towards disputed territories as shown on this map.

Detailed Condition:

Minor fold toning. Two rust spots in upper margin.
