Description:

Striking bird's-eye view map of the Columbia River Valley, by Fred A. Routledge, with 31 small views.

Oriented to look from the northwest, the map extends north of The Dalles to the Pacific Ocean, centered on Portland, and extending south to Crescent City and Klamath Falls, covering much of the State of Oregon.

The map displays topographical relief, along with rivers, roads, railroad lines, and the course of the Columbia River and many of its tributaries.

Routledge was perhaps the best mapmaker in Oregon history; his work exemplifies the stylized realism of the first decades of the 20th century, which matched modern mapmaking techniques with the budding pictorial mapping tradition, and the revelations of commercial air travel and photography.
