Description:

The Greatest San Diego Pictorial Map

Fine example of the rare Marston Company / Jo Mora Map of San Diego, published in 1928.

The map includes a detailed and whimsical look at San Diego, with marvelous caricature vignettes of historical persons and major landmarks, a town plan, and a whimsical historical timeline.

In the south, the map extends to Tijuana, with racetrack and border crossings depicted. Coronado and North Island were still separated at this time, with Rockwell Field shown with a docked airship and a biplane at the Naval Air Station. The built-up section of San Diego is largely confined to the area between National City and Balboa Park. Hunting is shown in Mission Bay. There are small communities in Mission

Beach, Pacific Beach, and La Jolla. Camp Kearny is shown up north. Many elements of San Diego's military history can be seen on the map.

The Marston Department store was a major San Diego establishment, which had started in 1878. The map was made to celebrate the store's 50th anniversary. Women's fashion from the five decades of the store's existence decorate the upper right corner of the map.

The map gives the sense that, even in 1928, San Diego was still a small, quiet community perched on the U.S. border and the Pacific Ocean. Cows graze in what is now Clairemont, and skunks, coyotes, and bobcats inhabit an otherwise bucolic Mount Soledad.
