Description:

Uncommon map of the Alpine region of North and South Tyrol, together with Trentino in Italy. The map is remarkably detailed, however, some parts are as yet unmapped, likely due to their sheer inaccessibility, for example, the mountains east of Brenner in Austria.

Numerous cities and towns are named, including Innsbruck, Trent, Bolzano, and Brixen. The areas which now encompass the famed ski resorts of Tyrol, include the Nordkette area south of Innsbruck.

The region of Tyrol, which now encompasses three states spread across the Austrian-Italian border, was once ruled by the great Counts of Tyrol in the Middle Ages, which established its independent nature. Eventually, the region was agglomerated into the Hapsburg Empire. It remained as part of this entity until Italian unification in the 19th.
