Description:

Prepared From Maps Issued By The British War Office Intelligence Branch

Highly detailed map of this important section of the Nile River, shown in its serpentine path through the central part of Sudan, as it flows northward toward Egypt and the Mediterranean.

Stanford's map was one of the most detailed maps of the late 19th Century covering the middle Nile.

The map also gives a fine account of the remote trading routes, villages and tribes in the region, including a number of ruins. Commentary is also given on the different types of lands (fertile, pasture, etc.) and the locations of wells along the roads.

Detailed Condition:

Segmented and laid on linen, with original covers.
