Description:

Former Dutch Colonies in Guiana on the Eve of Consolidation Into British Guiana

Fine example of this remarkable sea chart of the Coast of Guyana, originally published by William Heather.

The present edition of the chart was issued by Norie, issued after the British retook control of the former Dutch Colonies in the region for the final time in 1803 and the formal cession of the colonies to the British in August 1814. Later, in 1831, they would be formally merged into the newly created British Guiana.

The chart is focused on the location of the Demerara, Surniname and Cayenne Colonies, each of which, along with Berbice, Essequibo and Pomeroun, which changed hands several times between 1783 and the British recapture in 1796, which was likely the reason for creation of the first state of the map by William Heather in 1797.

The chart includes larger inset maps of the Entrance to the Orinoco River, "Essequibo", Berbice River, Surinam River and Cayenne.

The majority of the region would become British after 1814, although Cayenne would remain a French Colony and later a French Department.
