Description:

Highly detailed map of Spain and Portugal, showing coats of arms of various principalities and substantial detail. This finely engraved map first appeared in Chatelain's monumental seven-volume Atlas Historique, one of the most famous and prolific works of the early 18th century.

An index in the bottom right lists the principal towns of the region, and a detailed note explains that while history is nebulous, so is geography, and place names vary wildly. The note says that one has just to compare Ptolemy's geography to a modern author's work to understand this.

The map is highly detailed, with notes throughout. A key shows where various institutions, such as inquisition sites and universities, can be found. In all, an interesting map with much detail.
