Description:

Fantastic set of five maps showing the distribution of agricultural products throughout the United States in the era following the Civil War. This map appeared in several of Alfred Theodore Andreas's atlases, including his Illustrated Historical Atlas of the State of Iowa.

The map shows where wheat, hay, corn, cotton, and tobacco are cultivated, with a key showing four to five grades of density. A note says that these gradings are relative, and census data does not show exact quantities.

The statehood map represents that of the modern-day, with the exception of Oklahoma being named Indian Territory and North and South Dakota being joined.
