Description:

Attractive original antique map of the southernmost of the historical counties of Wales, Glamorgan. Containing a great many decorative elements, the map is a prime example of 17th-century Dutch School cartography.

The map shows Glamorgan a century after it had fallen under English rule. The map contains numerous features, including cities, mountains, towns, and more. The cartography is derived from the John Speed map of the same county first published in 1610.

Numerous decorative elements are on display throughout the image, including sailing ships, the coat of arms of the royal family, and three additional cartouches. The map originally appeared in Blaeu's atlas of the British Isles, first published in 1645 as part of his Atlas Novus.
