Description:

Fine original antique political map of Europe, showing continent with its approximate borders. The map was published in Paris by Nicholas de Fer in 1705.

The map includes a number of features of interest. Sweden extends into what is now Finland and Russia. Tsar Peter I is not yet shown to have captured Nyenskans and renamed it St. Petersburg, although he had done so two years prior, in 1703, as part of the Great Northern War. Greece and the Balkans are shown as part of "Turkey in Europe."

A number of cities are shown, with important cities shown using a small pictorial symbol. The Alps, Pyrenees, and Carpathians are shown pictorially. Rivers are also shown. In all, a very nice antique map.

Detailed Condition:

Minor fold toning. Two sheets, with the separate text leaf.
