Description:

One of the Earliest Obtainable Maps of Georgia in its Modern Configuration.

Rare full wash color example of Matthew Carey's second map of Georgia, first issued in 1814.

Following the creation of Mississippi Territory in 1798, the borders between Mississippi Territory and Georgia were continuously changing, with modifications in 1804 and 1812. Carey's map was the first atlas map published after the establishment of the "modern" boundary between Georgia and Mississippi Territory (which would become the Alabama-Mississippi border).

The map continues to show East Florida to the south of Georgia, with the western 2/3rds of the state still Indian lands, including the Tallassee, Seminole, and various Creek nations still dominating the West, with the area which would become Atlanta still far into the Indian lands.

The map includes a number of early roads, counties, towns, and other features.

An essential map for Georgia collectors.
