Description:

Attractive map of Boulogne-sur-Mer in northern France, with south-oriented at the top. The map shows the 18th-century layout of the city, with an older elevated part of the city and a younger coastal part. Detail is extensive, with topography, rivers, and roads shown, and maritime detail includes soundings and sandbanks.

Boulogne-sur-Mer was always an important naval port due to its proximity to the British Isles and was a center of conflict during the Middle Ages, the Napoleonic Wars, and the World Wars. The city would see notable growth and investment during the 18th and 19th centuries when conflict between France and England was at its highest.

The map appeared in Jacques Nicolas Bellin's Le Petit Atlas Maritime Recueti de Cartes et Plans des Quatre Parlies du Monde en Cinq Volumes, first published in Paris in 1764. The Atlas was an important 5 volume work, showing many places of interest around the world.
