Description:

One of the earliest appearances of Wyoming on a map -- so early, it has not yet been added to the map title.

The map Pre-dates Yellowstone. Yellowstone Lake is also called Subletts Lake and is pushed far to the west of its actual location. The region between the Yellowstone River and the North Platte is largely unknown. Dakota and Wyoming have no counties. Idaho has only 5 counties. Montana has 9 counties.

Shows early explorers routes, forts, roads, towns, villages, Indians, etc as well as Gold Mines in Western Montana. The map also shows a number of proposed railroad routes and trading posts. Several other Gold regions, including one in Idaho are noted.

This is a very unusual early edition of the map, showing Wyoming extending over to Red Butte, some 100 miles west of its true border.
