Numerous historical notes dot the map, including the dates of Lewis & Clark's travels through the area.

This is a beautiful example of Fred A. Routledge's characteristic stylized realism, which he deployed to great effect in his views and maps of Oregon and the surrounding areas.

Routledge appears to have been greatly motivated in his work by the advent of commercial air travel, which he often explicitly references in his maps and views.

Detailed Condition:

Folding map printed on both sides. Horizontal folds (vis-a-vis the image), as issued.
