Description:

Scarce first state of this antique map of South Carolina from one of the most prolific American mapmakers of the 19th century.

The map shows the routes, railroads, and settlements in the state, though it also locates various other features including rivers, canals, and even swamps. The names and outlines of the counties as they stood at the time are shown. The adjoining states of North Carolina and Georgia are portrayed in part.

The map includes a detailed inset map of Charleston showing the layout of this city at the confluence of the Ashley and Cooper Rivers. This inset shows a large area around Charleston, out to Sullivan Island and Morris's. Particular note is paid to military installments and railroads.
