Description:

Rare Map of North America Published in Barcelona

Scarce, detailed Catalan map of North America, published in Barcelona.

The map shows the continent covered in mountains ranges and riverine systems. The names of indigenous groups are included, especially in the West. Political divisions are shown with outline color: the United States in green, Britain in red, Latin America in yellow, and France and Russia in blue. Interestingly for the date of publication, the map does not recognize the independence movements of Latin America and Haiti.

The map especially emphasizes Russian America in Alaska and includes the newly created, yet unlabeled Oregon Territory. However, flanking this extension of the United States to the Pacific are British possessions, including a curious portrayal of the British-American boundary and a British enclave on the coast of California.

Alabern y Mola's treatment of the Northwest Passage is decisive, if quite fanciful. It shows a straight run across the top of the Canadian Arctic regions, with Greenland extending in an arc across the Arctic region to Kiteguenlandia, a place name for which we can find no other references. Kiteguenlandia is only narrowly separated from northern Alaska, creating an enclosed Polar Sea (Mar Polar) for the Northwest Passage.

The Mississippi River is colored in red. The Upper Missouri River and its tributaries are largely based
